HERR POLLAK IN CHICAGO,

The Fastest Talker in the World Makes Horr Pollak, of Europe, is in Chicago.

Of all the notables of the old world, Herr Pollak is the best known across seas. Princes and potentates may have eccentricities which render them conspicuous, but Herr Pollak is chief of all the freaks of Europe. There is not a capital of the old world where he is a capital of the old world where he is not known. He is about thirty-five years of age and drosses quietly. Yesterday afternoon he walked in the Old Vienna, in the Plaisance, and as soon he got inside the gates he announced in stentorian tones: "I am Herr Pollak, of Europe!"

Immediately an informal meeting of the officers was held, and he was given the freedom of the village. They did not grant the honor from choice. They knew the man and knew that he would how the man and knew that he would take it anyway.

Herr Pollak's specialty is this: He has a repertoire of 20,000 words, which he repeats in forty minutes, being at the rate of 500 words a minute, as can be demonstrated. This is all he does, the rest being orchestra, costumes limelights and "business," as the actors call it. This very remarkable man says that he is the fastest talker in the world and that the woman has not yet been born who can keep up with him for a single dash. When appearing in public, which he occasionally does, ho wears a costume something like that worn by an assistant to an Italian organ grinder. It is not for money that he appears in public. He is the one European at present in this city who does not want money. Glory is one European at present in this city who does not want money. Glory is his one aim in life. He talks of it and dreams of it. Fifteen languages are at his tongue's end, but they do not all flow so rapidly as the one which he inflicts on the public, and which he learned in his native town of Prosenitz, Hansen. Hungary.

Hungary.

The 20,000 words he uses are not in any way connected, and give no meaning to the listener. In giving his performance, after the band has started up, he advances to the edge of the platform and starts in. At the word "Go!" he rushes at his task like a Kansas cyclone on a farm-house. His style is something like this:

"Rats, mice, cats, beer, beefsteak, something like this:

"Rats, mice, cats, beer, beefsteak, sausages, horseradish, pumps, Turks, Chicago, pigs, ham, sugar, vinegar."

Then he takes a quick breath, and as the leader of the orchestra quickens the tempo, he goes at it again with:

"Money, rum, idiot, chestnut, cheese, dollar, gum, spring chicken (this counts two words), street, sweet, write, smile, chin."

And so on. He places himself under bonds not to repeata word. He carries around in his clothes 40,000 florins, which he says he will give to any stenographer who will take down what he says.

AN ACTRESS IN TROUSERS.

Fauny Kemble, as Dress Reformer, Shocks Her Friends.

Fanny Komble had her ideas about dress, and on one occasion-at an excursion given by a Mrs. Sedgwick-appeared in full bloomer costume-blouse. pants and boots, says a writer in Lippincott's. Mrs. Sedgwick, who was very pincott's, Airs, Sedgwick, who was very particular about dress and had a New England woman's regard for the proprieties, said to her:

"Fanny, how can you hear to make yourself so conspicuous?"

"Elizabeth," she replied, and I shall never forget her voice and manner, "I won't listen to maralizing at this will won't listen to moralizing on this sub-ject. When I go on the stage I dress for the occasion; when I go into the drawing room or to a ball I dress for the occasion, and when I go a fishing I dress for the occasion."

By and by, as we rowed out on the lake, the water began coming into the boat, and Mrs. Sedgwick's long skirts became saturated with the not very clean fluid. Mrs. Kemble several times called her attention to the superiority of her dress for boat wear, and as we rowed in quite crushed her with the remark that she was the most bedraggled creature she had ever seen.

A JAPANESE HENRY IRVING.

Danjiro is His Name, And he is Considered a Great Actor.

Danjiro, the great Japanese actor, is the Henry Irving of Japan. Whenever he acts the prices are raised, but still the house is crammed full, and the great Danjiro is, in his way, a reformer. Hitherto men and women have nover been mixed on the Japanese stage. There have been plays entirely acted by men and boys, and also by women and girls. But recently Danjiro has allowed his two daughters to go on the regular stage and to mix with the male performers. Danjiro is the greatest actor on the Japanese stage; but conceive an artist of his eminence dressed up as a woman with kimono and obi, and going through with Rimonoandon, and going through the most tedious posturings for over an hour, bending and swaying his body, and playing tricks with a paper fan. At Tokio Danjiro must have been on the Tokio Danjiro must have been on the stage posturing and gyrating for at least an hour. It bored me to death; I candidly own it, writes Clement Scot, in the Illustrated American. But this is called amusement in Japan, and the people like nothing so well as one of these interminable dances, accompanied by music that is calculated to drive the ordinary European melancholy mad.

THE ACTOR'S DREAD,

Omens That Disturb the Secenity of Theatrical People.

It is probable that as a class none are more superstitious than the sons and daughters of Thespis. You can scarcely enter a single dressing-room without finding the horseshoe in a prominent position, and as the actor moves to and fro he will carry this lucky symbol with him, says a London paper.

Mr. Irving carried his horseshoe to America and back.

One well known actor is said to be in possession of one of Garrick's teeth. Should he fail to carry it in his waistcoat pocket he would go about in fear that the fates would frown on him and his work. Scores of actors wear talls-mans round their necks, which, of course, are hidden from view; but in the matter of stage superstitutions it will be hark to beat that which is in vogue at every theate: during the re-hearsal os a play, be it new or old.

The last three or four words of a new production are neverspoken during the period of rehearsal of the piece; most frequently they are never written by the author.

the author.

The superstition of the theatrical world is that it would be certain to bring bad luck te the piece if the last words were pronounced on the stage before the first night. But as the play must have an end, and it should be known to all present that it is at an the author. and, the actor or actress intrusted with the last lines usually interpolates word or two.

Sometimes it ends in this fashion:

"And now, farewell. All is happily settled, "I can now return home and welcome. Tum-tum-iddle-um." Or it may be (as is frequently the case): "We can now depart hence, my friends, and—have a little refreshment."

"Yes, yes!" cried the actor passionally at rehearsal as the auth the play.

tes, yes: cried the actor passion-ately at rehearsal, as he ends the play, "all is forgiven. Kneel down, my dar-ling girl; my brave lad kneel here at my feet and I will bless you with—a penny sponge cake!"

NO FLOWERS FOR A JAP ACTOR. His Admirers Present Him With e Drop Curtain Instead.

In Japan they do not throw flowers or wreaths to an actor. They give him a drop curtain, and it becomes his personal property. In Japan they applaud freely, they weep copiously, but they never hiss. It is said that the Japanese are unemotional. But even in the ness are unemotional. But even in the old days of Robson and the "Porter's Knot" at the Olympic, I have never seen such floods of tears shed in a theatre as I did one afternoon at Nagasaki, the situation being the parting of an old mother and her favorite son, writes Clement Scott, in the Bustraled American. The worden spectators were American. The women spectators were literally rocking with grief, and I thought their tears would put out the fires in all the little private boxes or pit wells.

Not being familiar with the language, it is impossible to criticise the acting, but I noticed that no actor uses his ordinary voices on the stage or talks in a natural manner. Danilro chants his sentences, his voice ranging from a deep base to the squeakiest of falsetto. The effect is that of a swinging signboard swayed by a gust of wind. What we call natural acting is unknown. Tradition and conventionally are paramount.

The dramas usually played are based on some historial or legendary ro-mance; and they are divided into two parts, one conversational, the other choral. The actors carry on the con-versation, but the chorus is sung to the accompaniment of a Samisen by a per-son or persons in the Tsubo, a screened seat on the right of and above the main seat on the right of and above the main stage. The chorus explains the emo-tions and characters of the personages, and while the really dreadful and ap-palling music goes on the actors make the gestures only. In this respect the Japanese drama resembles the theatre of the Greeks; but I trust that such discordant chants never offended the sensitive Grecian car.
